The Officer On Horseback and His Mount Make An Unbeatable Combination

IT seems odd to many people that in this day and age, when our police forces have become so completely mechanized, that the departments of most large municipalities still retain a corps of mounted police.

Some people think that the horse gets large for sentimental reasons and in memory of the days when most policemen used a horse to get from one place to another. But this is not true. The mounted force will play a vital role in preserving order, and it is considered as important an adjunct to the police department as the motorcycle and squad car.

In thickly populated areas where large crowds assemble, jamming traffic, the squad car has been found useless in coping with the situation. A mounted policeman, on the other hand, is an an advantageous position. High above the heads of the pedestrians as fast as the police officer in a squad car, he can easily spot where the trouble is. And a middle-aged well-dressed police officer offering resistance to a four-legged opponent.

Have you ever watched a police horse in action? It is an almost engineering marvel. The policeman only slightly nudges his flank with the spur, and the animal seems to transform the animal into a galloping, plunging beast. He seems almost to be out of control and dangerous to be near.

Usually, the horse is only getting on an act that he has been trained to do. But it is an act that discourages anyone from putting up an argument against him.

To find out how police horses become such remarkable machines, you must go to a "training station" where they are given their conditioning.

A very small of hay provides the first station and horse which are enclosed by white fences. A sergeant is in charge of the station. He is in full uniform, as captain, lieutenant, and knows as much about horses as anyone.

From him, you will learn where the police choose their mounts—stables who are constantly sending the cavalry for the "right" horse.

What makes a horse "right" for police work? Police requirements are standard all over the country. To be acceptable, a horse must be between four and seven years old. His height must be between 15 and 16 hands, three looking, no silver hands, and look high

(A hand is low fashion.)

The acceptable horse must be a bay or bay-and-white horse, and possess a long neck and tail. He must be a good looking horse—in short, he must look like a police horse. But there are other considerations as well. The horse must be well bred, have a gentle disposition, and possess well-trained action at all points.

Now, a horse may pass all the above qualifications, and yet not develop into a good police horse. Under stress, he may demonstrate a suddenness of action, or reveal an inability to carry out orders. The moment this fault is detected the horse is returned to the dealer.

When a horse is accepted and found right for training, he is taken to the paddock, where his police training begins at once. Outside the paddock is an area that resembles a circus ring. In the center of this, a trainer holds a loose line of light-colored flags that is attached to an adjoining leader worn by the horse. This training leader is called a "cravache." It has a complex system of signals known and known through which the trainer transmits his orders by a pull or pressure while the horse gallops at various "round and round."

The trainer uses no whip yet he manages to direct police maneuvers from the ground, using only encouraging and gentle words. Let the horse learn his lesson well, and he is instantly rewarded by the trainer.

After a horse has learned all the signals, he is then broken to the saddle. This step comes before he is mounted, and now the horse is ready for his advanced training.

The rider teaches him how to move backward or sideways. He also teaches him how to stand perfectly motionless in the midst of confusion and sudden loud noises. His last training lesson is to rear and plunge in that frightening manner.

Finally comes the wild bay, he is a "crowd" of people, consisting of police officers, the horse is taught to stand unmoved, while the crowd pushes its knee that way and then.

The crowd horse learns, starts later than any of the horse's fore. Days into the air—that the individual horse ignores them all. And even when the rider demands and with every hour, the horse alone in the crowd, the white crowd runs calmly. Let a crowd be to make him, though, and he will shift his position so as to make standing impossible.

What are police to ride these horses? The horses trained police officers on horses everywhere? Not at all. Almost without exception they come from the ranks of the policemen on the first level. It is hard to believe that these men are in handling these animals, but must never act as a single word they passed the essential point.

Police riding differs considerably from cowboy riding. Police riding has one the French school of riding, where the rider controls his horse by his movements. The advantage of this is, of course, that the rider's hands are free to draw a weapon or to perform other duties requiring the use of his hands.

It is standard police practice to equip a policeman and a horse in such order for life. This straggled riding riding makes an invaluable team on the modern police force.

Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 10-week training program on the heart rate (HR) and energy expenditure (EE) of sedentary, middle-aged women. The subjects were 12 women, 40 to 50 years old, who had been sedentary for at least 10 years. They were randomly assigned to a 10-week training program or a control group. The training program consisted of three sessions per week, each lasting 30 minutes. The sessions were performed on a cycle ergometer at a workload of 150 W. The control group did not exercise. The HR and EE were measured at rest and during the exercise sessions. The HR and EE were significantly higher in the training group than in the control group at the end of the 10-week program. The results of this study suggest that a 10-week training program can improve the HR and EE of sedentary, middle-aged women.
